Fein may be added to any other beverage, including alcohol.

Fein is a food product, not a dietary supplement.

Pronunciation

(FEEN)

Who uses Fein?

Fein is recommended for adults 18 and older looking for an energy boost. Fein is especially popular with:

- Students
- Truck and Bus Drivers
- Law Enforcement, Firefighters and other first responders
- Medical professionals
- Soldiers and military personnel
- Athletes
- Social people who want to conquer the night and take on the day!
- People driving long distances or operating heavy machinery
- “Graveyard shift” workers

Health Benefits

Many professions require a degree of alertness that may be enhanced by caffeine. Fein provides this without large amounts of sugar, sucrose, glucose or artificial sweeteners which might lead to weight gain or other undesirable effects. No crashing – because Fein is a “pure” form of caffeine without sugar and carbs, there is no sudden energy letdown.

Other Benefits

Cost: Fein costs as little as 65¢ per stick, and when bought in quantities, can be as low as 50¢ per stick. This compares favorably with nearly every energy drink product.

Convenience: Fein's single-serving sticks are individually wrapped. These portable packets are about ½ the size of a pack of sugar, with no muss, no fuss, no odor. Just add to any beverage.

Contraindications

Fein is not recommended for anybody instructed to avoid or limit caffeine intake, including but not limited to children, infants, pregnant women or people with hypertension.

How Is Fein Different From Coffee or Tea?

Coffee and tea contain other ingredients that "blunt" or reduce the stimulant effects of caffeine. Since Fein uses a different, pure source of caffeine it is more potent than caffeine coming from coffee or tea. This is why the amount of caffeine in Fein (and the leading energy drinks) is much lower than a large cup of coffee, and yet it still delivers an energy boost!

Will Fein affect workplace or athletic drug testing?

No. Fein's proprietary formula has been tested by the Banned Substances Control Group (www.bscg.org), and is found to be free of any substances banned by sport, or that might generate a positive result for any workplace testing other than caffeine.
